Title:
"This is Not a Game: Embedding Human Rights Warnings in Nuclear Discourse"

Youth Fusion Proposal to Establish a Joint Working Group with Abolition 2000

Youth Fusion seeks to work with Abolition 2000 to oppose the trivialization of nuclear weapons, advocate for mandatory human rights warnings, and demand nuclear policy rooted in human dignity and accountability, though establishment of a joint working group.

Concept Overview:

Across negotiation tables, newsrooms, and political speeches, nuclear weapons are discussed with detachment as if they are abstract, strategic tools. But behind every missile, every deterrent policy, lies the unbearable human cost: mass civilian casualties, generational health crises, environmental destruction, and existential threat. Currently, Youth Fusion is documenting the Human Cost in our OCHRCH Report on Human Rights Violation in the Marshall Islands, making it straightforward, even generations not directly affected by nuclear testing have their prospects robbed in even the general sense.

The youth inheriting this precarious future, demand a systemic shift: Nuclear weapons discourse, whether in media, academia, or policy, must carry clear, visible Human Rights Warnings, reminding the world that nuclear decisions directly threaten life and dignity. This working group welcomes participants beyond youth voices to join this urgent effort as this concerns future generations but beyond humanity.

Objectives

This working group seeks to reframe how nuclear weapons are discussed across policy, education, and media by highlighting the profound and lasting human rights consequences of their use, testing, and ongoing development. By embedding clear human rights considerations into nuclear discourse, the group will work to ensure that such discussions reflect the lived impact on individuals, communities, and the environment , not solely strategic or geopolitical considerations.

Our goal is to support the integration of ethical, humanitarian, and rights-based frameworks into nuclear policy dialogue and public communication, fostering greater awareness, accountability, and informed engagement at all levels.

Initial Projects

1. In Human Rights Warning Stamp Deployment:
   Launch a globally recognizable warning Stamp to be displayed on all media, reports, and policies discussing nuclear weapons, similar to health warnings on cigarettes or content advisories on media. Example: ' Human Rights Alert: Nuclear Weapons

Violate Our Future'.

2. Youth Nuclear Awareness & Advocacy:
   Build educational platforms empowering young people to recognize and challenge the strategic 'game' narrative surrounding nuclear weapons, focusing on human rights impacts.

3. Global Petition for Mandatory Warnings:
   Mobilize a worldwide youth-led petition calling on governments, news outlets, and international bodies to adopt mandatory Human Rights Warnings in all nuclear-related discourse, policy papers, defense statements, documentaries, and broadcasts.

As nuclear rhetoric escalates, the gap widens between political gamesmanship and living consequences for humanity. Our generation refuses to stay silent while leaders gamble with our future.Nuclear weapons are not strategy — they are a human rights catastrophe waiting. Every discussion must reflect that truth.
